SHE LOVED MANSFIELDAND BECAME A NUN

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—That Richard Mansfield's early life held a romance that exceeded in pathos any that he ever portrayed on the stage, and that his gentle heroine sleeps under the sod of the burying ground of a Washington convent, to which she retired on forsaking the world years ago, is a fact little known to the students of the great actor's public career.

The man who was regarded by his audiences as a self-centered and wholly egotistical artist, had from his youth cherished an affection as unselfish, and as hopeless as that of Dante for Beatrice.

Few of the young pupils of the convent school to whom the popular actor, when young Richard Mansfield's star had just risen on the dramatic horizon, the lovely daughter of a Maryland country gentleman made her first visit to an aunt in New York. Fresh from the quiet of her girlhood home, the young girl entered with childish joy into all the pleasures offered by the big city.

The first visit which she had ever paid to a theater was to see the play in which Mansfield was then making his first great success.

After the performance one of the members of the theater party presented the actor to the young Maryland girl. From that night Mansfield's fate was bound up in that of the gentle girl of whom he spoke henceforth as the "White Rose."

The picture which the pretty country girl, whose simple white frock contrasted as strongly with the elaborate apparel of the other women as the white rose which she had placed in her hair did with the jeweled tiaras, appeared to Mansfield's artistic sense, and he singled her out for marked attention. He found her as lovely in character as she was in person, and fell as deeply in love as only a man of his ardent temperament and determination can.

But fate had fixed a barrier between the actor and the object of his devotion. The family of the young woman, devout Catholics and proud of their distinguished ancestry, held the stage and all that pertained to it in abhorrence. The father, in particular, a country gentleman of a fast disappearing type, looked upon his daughter's suitor as being socially on the same plane as a circus clown, and sternly forbade her to receive his attentions.

Forced to choose between his love and his art, Mansfield, with a grief which left an ineffaceable impression on his life and his art, bade farewell to his dream of happiness, and continued with renewed ardor the career to which fate had predestined him.

That his affection was returned, there can be no doubt, for the girl whom he had loved so ardently, to the surprise of all her friends, soon after entered upon a novitiate in a religious order, and on finishing her probation took the final vows which separated her forever from the man to whom she had given her heart.

Years ago she became a teacher in the convent school of the order in this city. The charm which had made her a belle in girlhood and her unusual intellectual gifts made her one of the most successful and popular teachers of the institution, which enjoys a wide reputation for excellence, and in which thousands of young women from all parts of the United States have received their education.

That he had never forgotten his early romance and still cherished a tender affection for his heroine she knew, for every engagement which the actor played in Washington was signalized by the appearance of a box of white roses, at the convent, sent by Mansfield to the "White Rose" of his early dreams.

When, last spring, death claimed the nun, Mansfield was grief-stricken, and it is said that at the time of the last engagement he played in this city he visited the graveyard of the convent and placed a wreath of white roses on the grave of his early love.

RHEUMATISM.

So little confidence has the average man in the various cures for rheumatism that he often suffers for years without making any effort to find relief. He then finds that it has become chronic. This is a mistake, as the pain can always be relieved, and in most cases a cure effected by applying Chamberlain's Pain Balm. The relief from pain which it affords is alone worth many times its cost. It makes sleep and rest possible. For sale by all dealers. Benson, Smith & Co., Ltd., agents for Hawaii.

C. H. McBride, until the present cashier at the Planters' Experiment Station, entered upon his duties as private secretary to Governor Frazier October 1.
